

Need help to get online?

Do you want to get online but don't know where to start? Maybe you have experience of surfing the web but now want to expand your web skills? If so, Norfolk County Council's libraries have a course for you.

Most of the county's libraries offer a range of courses for a variety of ages and abilities and many are absolutely free. The training can help beginners use a computer for the first time including how to use a keyboard and mouse. Other courses show how to move around websites, fill out forms and applications online, and how to set up and use email.

There is also training available to shop online, research your family history, save and retrieve digital photographs, use social media – like Twitter and Facebook – and search for a job. There really is something for everybody!

To find upcoming sessions near you, find out about any prices, and to book your place contact Sprowston Library on (01603) 408426, go to www.norfolk.gov.uk/getdigital or call 0344 800 8020.
